About ILPS

The ILPS has been established to provide through research, working papers, publications, seminars, conferences, projects, and engagement, a platform for intellectual dialogue on contemporary issues of international law and foreign policy. The emphasis of this society will be on public international law, international affairs, and foreign policies of different countries. The society aims to engage with various stakeholders such as scholars, universities, policymakers, think tanks, and intergovernmental organizations. It provides students from different law universities the opportunity to publish their blogs and articles on international laws and policies on our distinguished website.

About the Competition

In the arena of international relations and diplomacy, the key to resolving disputes is to formulate a firm and decisive diplomatic policy around which the course of action of a nation shall revolve. The world in the 21st century has witnessed a transitional shift from a complicated world order to complex world order. The complicated world order can be correlated to a game of chess that is quite intricate with infinite possibilities but it has set rules for the pieces to move. On the contrary, a complex world order can be correlated to a game of snooker where even a maestro may not be able to play the same shot again to achieve the same desired result. In this complex world order, countries bank on a fixed structured diplomatic policy to manage international relations but the said policy may not yield the same result every time. Therefore, in such a complex world there is always room for fresh and dynamic perspectives. To kindle this approach of having a dynamic perspective on international issues among the research scholars, professionals, and students, the International Law and Policy Society at National Law University Odisha brings forth the 1st edition of the Diplomatic Policy drafting competition.

Competition Problem for the 1st Edition of the ILPS NLUO Policy Drafting Competition

The River's Wrath

Rajesh was furious as he watched the news on his phone. The reporter was standing near the banks of Ganga, where a thick layer of foam and garbage covered the sacred water. He could see people wearing masks and gloves, trying to clean up the mess.

“The pollution in Ganga has reached alarming levels,” the reporter said. “According to local environmental activists, the main culprits are corporations that have set up factories along the river and dumped their toxic waste into it. They claim that these corporations have violated Indian laws and international treaties and have ignored repeated warnings from the government and civil society.” One of the biggest emitters was a Canada-based mining company called Plenbore. Plenbore is headquartered in Toronto.

Rajesh felt a surge of anger and sadness. He remembered how he used to swim in Ganga as a child, how he used to worship it as a goddess, how he used to drink its pure water. Now, he could not even touch it without risking his health.

He decided to join the protest that was planned for tomorrow outside the Canadian embassy in Delhi. He wanted to make his voice heard, he wanted justice for his river.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa, President Alexa was having an emergency meeting with her advisors. She had just received a phone call from Prime Minister Solanki of India, who had expressed her outrage over the pollution in Ganga and demanded an immediate action from the Canadian government.

Madam President, this is a serious situation,” President Alexa’s secretary of state said. “India is one of our most important allies in Asia, and we cannot afford to lose their trust and cooperation. We need to hold these corporations accountable and make them pay for their damages.”

“I agree,” President Alexa said. “But we also need to be careful not to harm our economic interests in India. These corporations provide thousands of jobs and millions of dollars in revenue for both countries. We need to find a balance between environmental protection and business development.”

President Alexa looked at her secretary of commerce, who had a worried expression on his face.

“What do you suggest?” she asked him.

He cleared his throat and said,

“Well, Madam President Alexa, I think we should try to negotiate with Prime Minister Solanki and offer her some incentives in exchange for easing his pressure on these corporations. Maybe we can increase our aid or trade or investment or military support for India.”

President Alexa frowned.

“That sounds like bribery,” she said.

“No, no,” he said quickly. “It’s diplomacy.”

She shook her head.

“I don’t like it,” she said. “It’s unethical and unfair. We should wait for Delhi’s official response.”

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Solanki's office are discussing matters in Delhi and thinking of devising a policy plan to resolve the issue of water pollution whilst handling the crisis in Canada-India's diplomatic relationship.

You are the foreign secretary to Prime Minister Solanki and your role is to draw a policy statement and propose a diplomatic solution. The policy statement should be diplomatic, non-coercive yet strong in wording.
